

Read Archbishop Justin's joint letter to The Times on the Government's refugee policy.

Sir, Whether the first deportation flight leaves Britain for Rwanda, this policy shames us as a nation. Rwanda is a brave country recovering from catastrophic genocide. The shame is ours – our Christian heritage inspires us to treat asylum seekers with compassion, fairness, and justice, as we have for centuries. Those deported to Rwanda will have no chance to appeal or reunite with family in Britain, no consideration of their asylum claim, recognition of their medical or other needs, or attempt to understand their predicament.

Many are desperate, fleeing unspeakable horrors. These are the people Jesus had in mind as he said, when we offer hospitality to a stranger, we do it for him. They are the vulnerable the Old Testament calls us to value.

We cannot offer asylum to everyone, but we must not outsource our ethical responsibilities, or discard international law, which protects the right to claim asylum.

We must end evil trafficking and reduce dangerous journeys to the UK. The church will continue to advocate for safe routes. But deportations — and the potential forced return of asylum seekers to their home countries — are not the way.
